The Psychoanalytic Review

October 2015 Special Issue: French Psychoanalysis
Edward Emery, Guest Editor

Locations and Dislocations: Psychoanalysis in France
Edward Emery

The Analyst’s Act and the Child’s Desire: A Retrospective Case Study
Annie G. Rogers
In this case study of child analysis, Rogers draws on evolved Lacanian frames of reference.

My Session With André
Michael Eigen
Eigen shares his personal perspective on André Green.

André Green on the Theory and Treatment of “Non-Neurotic” Patients
Gail Reed
Reed discusses and summarizes André Green’s ideas on how to think about and treat what he called “non-neurotic” patients, his term for borderline and narcissistic patients.

The Skin-Ego Theory: Dyadic Sensuality, Trauma in Infancy, and Adult Narcissistic Issues
Christine Anzieu-Premmereur
Anzieu-Premmereur examines Didier Anzieu’s concept of skin ego and its application in working with mothers and babies.

Après-Coup in French Psychoanalysis:
The Long Afterlife of Nachträglichkeit: The First Hundred Years, 1893 to 1993
Jonathan House and Julie Slotnick
House and Slotnick give an account of the history of “après-coup,” which has been focal in recent French analytic thinking.

Interview With Jean Laplanche
Conducted by Gisèle Danon and Didier Lauru, translated by Nicholas Ray
An interview from 2002, translated into English for this issue.

Jean Laplanche’s Masochism
Nicholas Ray
Ray highlights the diachronity of Laplanche’s thought.

The Introjective Function of Dreaming and Its Impact on the Theory of Technique
Jean-Marc Dupeu
Dupeu demonstrates the affinities between his own conception of the introjective function of dreaming and Jean Laplanche’s “general theory of seduction.”